There are many ways to increase diversity in the classroom that carry over to the boardroom. Evaluating your perspectives, learning new ways to value the differences in others, and finding ways to celebrate inclusion are all ways we can create a more welcoming environment. Join Emily Lasso de la Vega, Missouri S&T’s Diversity, Equity and Inclusion Educator, to discuss ways that individuals and organizations can evaluate and explore personal biases and group cultures that contribute to or hamper a spirit of inclusion.

Emily Lasso de la Vega moved to the United States in 2014 to pursue an undergraduate degree. Currently, she serves as the Diversity, Equity and Inclusion Educator for the department of Student Diversity Initiatives and advises the National Society of Black Engineers and Spectrum chapters at Missouri S&T. Emily is also attending classes to obtain a Master of Science in Learning Technologies and Design. She hopes to be able to integrate her passion for diversity and inclusion with her other passions: education, technology, design, and social sustainability.

To register and more info
global.mst.edu/lunch-learn